BOOK REVIEW

A HISTORY OF CENTRAL BANKING and THE S.A. RESERVE BANK

THIS two-volume work by Stephen Goodson is remarkable in every sense of the word. This reviewer predicts that it will become part of the watershed of truth now developing throughout the world. As a cornucopia of information, as an explanation of the many puzzling events throughout world history during at least the past 2,700 years, and as a solution to ‘insoluble’ aspects of many of mankind’s problems – it can serve as a valuable handbook and reference work for the man-in-the-street and the financial specialist alike . . .

A factor facing someone intending to write such a book is that peoples and countries cannot be separated from their means of exchange, such as money, representing as it does a quantum of energy, such as a product or service. When money becomes something else – a product itself, stripped of the meaning and value of what it symbolizes – it can be corrupted and manipulated into a method of control.

The writer would also have to prove that the alternative to central banking – i.e. state banking – would work. Goodson shows that wherever and whenever state banking has been implemented it has produced positive results, such as in Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Germany, Japan and Italy, and the enduring example of North Dakota, USA, among others.

He has also shown exactly how a sound banking system could be implemented.

A History of Central Banking

The role of money-lenders in history was once aptly termed by many acute observers as the ‘Hidden Hand’. It is the power to create, lend and accumulate interest on ‘credit’, and then re-lend that interest for further interest, in perpetuity, which creates pervasive, worldwide debt.

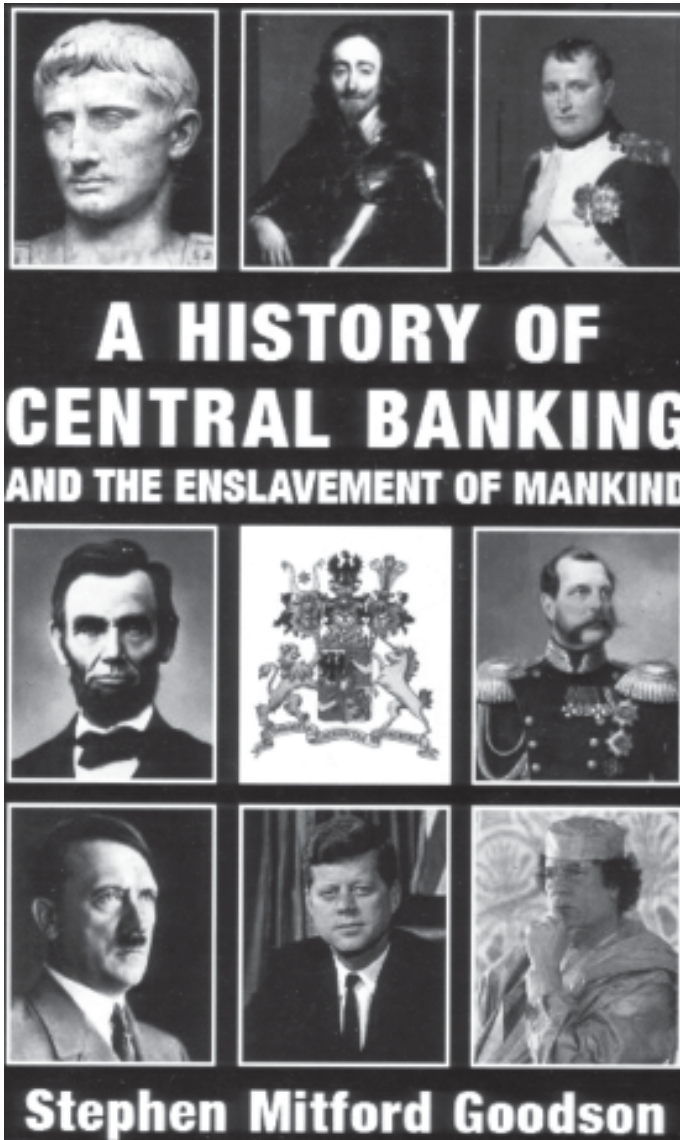

Many wars, revolutions, depressions, recessions, and other social upheavals, have been directly related to the determination of these money-lenders to retain and extend their power and profits. When any state, individual or idea has threatened their scam they have often responded with wars, revolutions and assassinations. Goodson shows that both World Wars, the Napoleonic wars, the American Revolution, the fall of Julius Caesar, the overthrow of Gaddafi in Libya and the revolution against Czar Nicholas relate, among others, to this ‘Hidden Hand’ in history.

It is recommended by this reviewer that A History of Central Banking be the first of the two books to be studied by the reader, as it gives a wide range of historical background from very early days and prepares the mind for the ‘punch-lines’ of the SA Reserve Bank book

Dr Mangosuthu Buthelezi, a Zulu prince, Member of Parliament, and Leader of the Inkatha Freedom Party, wrote the Foreword to the History of Central Banking, commencing bluntly: “This book is bound to be contro-

MANY readers will have been wondering what on Earth happened to 'Impact'.

Those in South Africa would apportion part of the blame to the 4-month postal strike. Your editor's illness, now thankfully mostly a thing of the past, was also part of the problem. Electricity 'load-shedding' contributed, with three and a half days of work lost in our region.

Now, with a fresh start, we can begin to enjoy the New Year. We have been fortunate to receive a few life-saving donations to tide us over, and now the mail is starting to flow once more.

Even though we have had to skip one issue, please be assured that our records are based on numbers (e.g. this one is 270-271) ensuring that all subscriptions extend for 6 issues.

Regarding the postal strike – although the Soviet instigators and paymasters of the Spanish Civil War in the 1930s used strikes by labour unions as a weapon to gain power, as they later supported strike action to aid the Communist-dominated ANC in South Africa – no strikes were ever allowed in the Soviet Union itself.

versial and engender strong reactions, and I do not endorse all of the viewpoints expressed therein."

Then he asks: "Why would a seemingly arid subject matter such as the history of central banking and of the monetary system give rise to such strong reactions? One must wonder why some will attach to this book the stigma of heresy, and argue that Goodson has gone beyond the parameters of acceptable historical debate.

"Goodson has the credentials and track record to make a credible presentation of a subject which he has researched for decades and which he has lived personally as a non-executive Director of the SA Reserve Bank."

Dr Buthelezi explains that for several years, he and his Party have argued that this country should reform its central banking and monetary system, "even if that means placing our country out of step with iniquitous world standards ..."

Early in his Introduction, Stephen Goodson explains:

"For any nation/state/society/community to have full sovereignty and independence in its affairs, absolute control over the means it employs to exchange goods and services must reside with the organs which represent the people, and must not be delegated to private individuals."

He emphasizes that throughout recorded history periods of state [that is, sovereign] control of the money supply have been synonymous with eras of prosperity, peace, cultural enrichment, full employment and zero inflation. But when private bankers usurp control of the money creation process, the inevitable results are recurring cycles of prosperity and poverty, unemployment, embedded inflation and the transfer of wealth and power to the tiny clique which controls this exploitative monetary system.

War, assassination, ruination of careers and other means have been the strategic choices used by these people to destroy those who have dared to defy them. The historical record speaks for itself.

The Roman Empire

"From Goodson's book," writes reviewer Tomislav Sunic, "transpires a remarkable knowledge of social and political circumstances of ancient Rome, or for that matter Cromwell's England, or Weimar Germany ... It is precisely Goodson's dispassionate narrative, well embedded in the framework of different historical periods which makes his book not just an informative and scholarly [piece of] literature, but also a refreshing read for a novice wishing to find out more about the mystique of money.

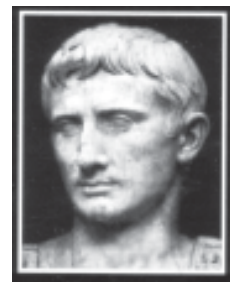

"Usury seems to have been for ages at the heart of social upheavals and wars."

Emerging from cattle barter as a means of exchange, the Romans passed through a copper age, when the Roman Republic expanded dramatically in size. It was an era of wealth and progress, when the Roman leaders lived by the austerity and honour of what it truly was to be 'Roman'. In the silver age that followed, a patrician elite minted the silver coinage, which led to the Roman army having to be expanded so as to conquer silver-rich territories. Agricultural production declined, wars and disputes followed, as well as piracy, violence, and political intrigue.

The history of money inevitably parallels Jewish history. From 161BC, Jewish groups, starting with Yehuda and Maccabee arrived in Rome when they worked as craftsmen, peddlers and shopkeepers who also indulged in money lending. The book is full of interesting pictures, one of which is an etching now in a Paris museum depicting the expulsion of the Jews from Rome by Emperor Hadrian in 35AD. Roman rulers later expelled them several times, but enforcement was weak and so the usurers returned each time.

A brief outline is given of Julius Caesar after his brilliant military conquest of Gaul and defeat of Pompey the Great in 48BC. On his return to Rome he found the streets and cities crowded with homeless and wretched poor who had been dispossessed by usurers and land monopolists. As the undisputed leader and hero of the Roman Republic, Caesar put into effect a number of social and monetary reforms, including the prohibition of charging interest on existing credit interest (i.e. com- (Contd on p.4)

A term used frequently in the book is 'fiat money', which is criticised in some quarters. However, Goodson says there is nothing wrong with it, as long as it is issued by the government (not by private bankers), and is carefully protected against counterfeiters. Non-fiat money, in contrast, has the serious drawback that whoever sets the prices of gold and silver, i.e. private bankers, can control the nation's economy. Fiat money, as defined by the Collins dictionary, is "paper currency made legal tender by government decree".

Mwezi reported it all

CORRUPTION, waste, neglect is the theme running through Mwezi Twala's Mbokodo. As an MK member he left SA in 1975 to receive military training in the USSR. During his experiences in Africa, he gradually realised that through the ANC in exile the armed struggle had failed. The leaders living in exile in Lusaka lived well, while the cadres – underfed, suffering from malaria and other tropical diseases – rotted in Angolan camps. Cadres who dared to complain about their enforced inactivity and poor conditions were labelled as dissidents and brutally punished.

Lame excuses about continued imprisonment of Eugene de Kock & Clive Derby-Lewis

THE legal team of Col. EUGENE de KOCK (former officer in command of the SA Police's anti-terrorist unit at Vlakplaas) are contesting the recent statement by the ANC Minister of Justice Masutha, that the decision about De Kock's parole has been postponed for a year.

His legal representatives insist that he is entitled to be set free after 20 years in prison. Masutha's excuse is that family members of De Kock's 'victims' have not yet been consulted. The legal argument of De Kock's team is that the law determining that family members had to be consulted, only came into effect in 2004, a whole decade after he was sentenced. This cannot therefore be applied in his case.

De Kock's legal representative, Julian Knight, says there is constantly a political game being played against his client. Excuses are made up so as to handle his case differ-ently to other condemned persons.

[Die Afrikaaner, Pretoria]

OTHER cases also being unjustly treated are the Clive Derby-Lewis one (with Derby-Lewis suffering from terminal cancer), and the Boeremag group.

It is obvious that, with the black masses always close to protest about one thing or another, and country-wide insurrection possible, the ANC government and its partners (SACP and Cosatu), simply cannot afford to release these men. They have served their time and are entitled to parole, but the law is not applied to them.

Sharing ESKOM's pain

THE Sunday Times was part of the propaganda monopoly owned and controlled by the left-liberal and communist plutocracy who never wasted an opportunity to target South Africa in the apartheid days. Since 1994, they have had to find other targets for their venom, which is an easy task since everything is falling apart and running down the drain. They specialise in scandals and wrongdoing, never once apologizing to South Africa for supporting a communist leadership elite that was bound to neglect, mismanage, or loot to the point of total collapse. Eskom is a good case in point, and several mainstream articles have appeared in recent weeks highlighting this fiasco.

How NOT to collapse electricity grid?

On top of all its other woes, writes the Sunday Times, Jnb (Dec. 2014) – Eskom is facing a long-term coal shortage and is looking for new suppliers. The wife of ANC secretary-general Gwede Mantashe, Nolwandle, is determined to be one of them.

A recent requirement that Eskom buy coal only from black-owned companies is likely to work in Mantashe's favour.

Nolwandle Mantashe is the CEO of the recently established Tamborah Resources. According to the company's website, its goal is to be a "long-term supplier of all power station coal to the national power utility".

Eskom has 14 coal-fired power stations, some of which are battling with generation problems.

Eskom urged people to switch off non-essential appliances as the risk of load-shedding increased yesterday when four of its power generating units broke down.

The four units - one at Nkangala's Matla, one at Witbank's Duvha and two at Limpopo's Matimba - each contribute an average of 800MW of power.

An Eskom acting spokesman said: "Our technicians are still trying to determine the cause of the breakdowns."

The day before, Eskom had told the nation that the power supply was stable and there would be no blackouts during the festive season! Then, Eskom resorted to stage three load-shedding.

To summarize . . .

*As far back as 2007 Eskom was warned about the condition of its coal-fired power stations, and Koeberg.

*Black coal providers: Such coal does not have the calorific quality of the big coal mining providers.

*There are intense inner battles between ambitious would-be CEOs for top-jobs, resulting in rapid turnover of top officials.

*Also battles between those who wanted to sell off (i.e. partially privatize) the facility, and those in Cosatu who didn't.

*Sending out Eskom spokesman like the harassed white Andrew Etzinger to 'explain' things, while a technical team 'war room' including officials, international and private sector experts, are said to be trying to resolve the mess the facility has landed in because of years of neglect, procrastination, waste and lack of the expertise because BEE displaced experienced white experts.

*Perhaps the most damaging – and least discussed – loss to Eskom comes from the millions of illegal connections to power grids made by shack-dwellers, who believed the false propaganda from Mandela to the present, promising electricity to the masses "who were denied electricity under apartheid". The loss to Eskom of these illegal connections amounts to several billions of rands.

pound interest). This enraged aristocrats and plutocrats whose 'livelihoods' were severely restricted. They conspired to murder. In 44BC, a mere four years after assuming power, Caesar arrived at the Senate building unarmed and unguarded, and was stabbed to death by 60 conspirators. The average school or college student might have wondered why Caesar was killed. Now they know why.

After Caesar's death, Rome adopted the gold standard, (27BC - 476AD) and this was to have major negative consequences. It is an important example of the role "money power," as we might call it, has played in the corruption and collapse of civilizations.

Various historic decisions were taken such as Christianity being established as the official religion by Emperor Theodosius, and from 380AD monetary power residing in the religious authority of the Pope. A feature of the imperial age was social injustice and the undermining of the middle classes through excessive taxation.

Constantine decreed one-tenth of all income had to be tithed to the Christian church, thus hastening the destruction of the empire. Vast hoards of gold were concentrated behind the 100 ft thick walls of the fortress city of Constantinople and the Vatican fortress in Rome.

"In its last years in the 5th and 6th centuries," writes Goodson, "the Roman Empire had become a parasitic organism, economically ruined." There was no industrial production, and agriculture was reduced to subsistence level, thus food had to be imported. Usury was practised on an unprecedented scale. The western half of the empire imploded in 476AD after the raids of the Goths and Vandals, resulting in the Dark Ages with its multi-century depression, no trade or commerce, even the knowledge of cement-making disappearing. Roman female fertility declined, and imported non-white slaves outnumbered citizens five to one.

Goodson extracts lessons from the fall of Rome and its dishonest economic system in which the means of exchange became debt- and interest-laden.

The Bank of England

Similarly, the history of England and its monetary policy from 757AD gives us a glimpse into the efforts of some of the rulers to ban money-lending, once it had arrived with Jews from Rouen who financed the military invasion of England by William the Conqueror in 1066AD. For this they were richly rewarded by being allowed to practise usury under English royal protection. The consequences for the English people were disastrous.

By the 13th century, as soon as a noble got into financial difficulty, the King would buy the debt from the money-lender and seize the land for himself. King John (1199-1216) pursued this dishonest policy. In 1215 the nobles (including the author's ancestor, Roger Bertram, Lord of Mitford) revolted and forced King John to sign the Magna Carta, the principal purpose of which, apart from constitutional reform, was to abolish usury. In 1290 Edward I expelled all Jews, (one of over 100 expulsions recorded throughout European history.) The announcement was greeted with jubilation throughout the land. With the banishment of the moneylenders and the abolition of usury, taxes were moderate and there was no state debt. England thrived. It was the time of Merrie England.

But this golden era came to an end in the reign of Elizabeth I (1558-1603), when small numbers of Jews settled in London practising as goldsmiths and money-lenders who issued gold receipts with interest.

Cromwell and the English Civil War

A conflict arose between the Stuart King Charles I (1625-49), who wished to maintain the pre-eminence of the Anglican Church, and the Puritans. Civil war broke out, which lasted from 1642 to 1648, during which 190,000 people died. The leader of the Roundheads, Oliver Cromwell, was bankrolled by moneylenders in Amsterdam as revealed in an exchange of correspondence in 1647, in return for which the Jews were allowed to return to England once more. King Charles was imprisoned and a show trial ensued, during which he was found "guilty" and executed in 1649. Cromwell's death, his son's rule for a while, and the short reigns of the other two Stuart kings, climaxed with the successful military campaign of William of Orange, which was also financed by Amsterdam money-lenders.

In return for their support, William III surrendered the royal prerogative of issuing England's money free of debt and interest, to a privately owned consortium (based on the Dutch model) known as The Governor and Company of the Bank of England in 1694. A.N. Field in All These Things described the consequences as follows: "The history of the second Jewish settlement in Britain is one long trail of parchment bonds shackling the nation in debt. Every step in their ascent in the nation's affairs has been marked by the increase and multiplication of debt." The Bank of England was the model on which all central banks in Europe and later in the USA were replicated.

From then on a pattern emerged, writes Goodson, of attacking and enforcing the bankers' system of usury that has been deployed widely in the modern era and includes the defeats of Imperial Russia in World War I, Germany, Italy and Japan in World War II, and most recently Libya in 2011. These were all countries which had state banking systems. Citing Harvard historian Carroll Quigley, Goodson shows that the central banks became part of a vast interlocking system of international finance, which has done nothing but expand ever since.

Pattern of wars and depressions

Henceforth a pattern would emerge where unnecessary wars would be embarked upon which happened to increase the national debt and the profits of the usurers. "Significantly," writes Goodson, "most of these wars were started against countries that had implemented interest-free state banking systems, as was the case in the North American colonies and France under Napoleon."

Reviewer Kerry Bolton reminds us of Goodson's statement that after the defeat of Napoleon, Nathan Mayer Rothschild was active in pushing for a banking system that would secure control of Europe. Czar Alexander I rejected any such plans and instead created a new Holy Alliance between Russia, Prussia and Austria, who were to be pushed into cataclysmic conflict a few generations later. What was created in 1860 was a Russian state bank that served the people well for decades. Assassination was a useful tool to get rid of opponents of the Rothschild system. The last five Russian Czars were assassinated.

British Prime Minister Spencer Perceval (1812) – who opposed a war against the United States, which had refused to renew the charter of its central bank, the Rothschild-owned First Bank of the United States – was assassinated for his opposition. To a large extent 19th century America prospered precisely be-

IN the case of the Kennedy family, it will be remembered that Joseph Kennedy opposed the war against Germany in 1939 when he was US Ambassador to England. Subsequently, his eldest son, Joseph Jr, was killed in an aircraft accident; his two other sons John and Bobby, were assassinated; and the youngest of the clan, the president's son (whom the public will remember as the small boy who saluted at his father's state funeral in 1963) was killed when he was 38 years old. Bobby's son Michael died as an adult in a skiing accident. Thus, apart from the maverick Teddy Kennedy – who took care to accommodate himself to the New World Order – the entire male line was wiped out. This had the hallmarks of a long-running vendetta. [Impact] cause of the absence of a central bank. The attempt by England to abolish the American colonial currency was the prime cause of the American Revolution. Later American presidents Abraham Lincoln, James Garfield and John Kennedy were eliminated for the same reason. In addition, there was an assassination attempt on Andrew Jackson.

An ominous year for the USA, as well as for the entire world, was the creation of the Federal Reserve Bank in 1913, which indirectly precipitated the Western world into two world wars and hundreds of local wars all over the world. The US national debt has skyrocketed to US$18-trillion today. The central banks of various countries including the US Federal Reserve, and the secretive Bank for International Settlements, have brought about depressions.

By contrast, Goodson's book supplies the reader with fascinating details of the social and economic reforms brought in by enlightened rulers and how they uplifted their people. This would include the State Bank of North Dakota (in the USA).

Two Important Figures

*It took a British aircraft engineer, Clifford Hugh Douglas, to notice the disconnect in the way money flowed through industry, and how income tax was a 'negative dividend'. His economic theory known as Social Credit advocated the transfer of the money creation process from private banks (which create money out of nothing as an interest-bearing debt) to a state bank – among other reforms. After WWI Douglas devoted his life to promoting his ideas and gave lectures in many countries throughout the world. Two notable successes that he achieved were: The Social Credit Party obtained control of the provincial government of Alberta, Canada in 1935; and after a lecture tour in Japan, his policies were adopted by the Japanese government in 1932.

*A thunderous speech given in June 1932 in the US House of Representatives by the former chairman of the House Banking & Currency Committee, Hon Louis T McFadden, is reproduced in full in Goodson's book. The main thrust of the speech was that the 'Fed' was "an evil institution preying upon the people of the United States."

McFadden reminded Congress that "the dark crew of financial pirates ... financed Trotsky's mass meetings of discontent and rebellion in New York ... paid his passage from New York to Russia ... where he fomented and instigated the Russian Revolution, and they placed a large fund of American dollars at Trotsky's disposal in one of their branch banks in Sweden ... The Federal Reserve Act and the Federal Reserve Banks," he said "have violated their charters and should be liquidated immediately." He warned that "the American people, outraged, robbed, pillaged, insulted, and betrayed as they are in their own land, will rise in their wrath and send a President here who will sweep the money changers out of the temple."

In his review of this book, Mathew Johnson writes:

"This book is not a study in technical economics. It is, thankfully, a study in history. Goodson realizes what most economists do not: that to grasp any economic phenomenon, it must be seen as a product of many decades of historical development ... History has been fairly clear that strong states, those based on traditional authority, reject the alchemy of money and interest ..."

The central strength of Goodson's book, he says, is its consistency. It has one thesis: wherever state banks rule the financial universe of an economy, that economy does very well. Johnson points to the history of Russia, Ukraine, Poland, Libya and Syria. Belarus halted the IMF's privatisation deals so helpful to the Mafia, and today Belarus's unemployment is 1% and its industry has grown by 10% a year since 2000.

Likewise, China and Taiwan were able to withstand George Soros's currency meltdown of Asian currencies in 1997, because they both had state-controlled banks. The Burmese state bank is under the control of the Ministry of Finance. They are taking no chances with foreign manipulation of their currency.

INSIDE THE SA RESERVE BANK.

IN Inside the South African Reserve Bank, Stephen Goodson sweeps aside the usual dust of economic theory to provide a thoroughly engaging account of the origins and purposes of the Republic's central banking institution.

He not only gives an account of his time in SARB but places the bank within its historical context, having been established as part of a world-wide agenda, the purpose of which has been to fashion 'central banks' throughout the world as part of a global financial system controlled by international financiers.

Stephen Goodson's career in the South African Reserve Bank since 2003, when he was elected as a Non-Executive Director of the Bank, is written in the first person and records his many resolutions, as well as the nature of the SARB. It traces the drama of Tito Mboweni as Governor after Chris Stals, and the career of Gill Marcus, as well as her strategy to unseat Mboweni so as to take his place as Governor. Her scheme of attempting to blacken Goodson's reputation by feeding questionable 'information' to The Mail & Guardian about his political views, caused him to resign from the SARB board. [On 9 November 2014 Marcus finally lost her position as Governor, when Lesetja Kganyago took over.]

Shattering a commonly held view

The Foreword by Ahmed Motiar of Inside the South African Reserve Bank – Its Origins and Secrets Exposed commences: "Once in a while a book comes along which completely shatters a commonly held view about an institution that is considered as the custodian of a country's monetary system by ensuring its economic health. Stephen Mitford Goodson has done the country a great favour by exploding this myth in his book, Inside the South African Reserve Bank – Its Origins and Secrets Exposed. His shattering exposition of the despicable and immoral activities of the SA Reserve Bank demonstrates tremendous courage. The tragedy of our times is that few people are willing to stand up for truth as Goodson has done in his book ..."

In his Introduction to the SARB book, Goodson wastes no time in pointing out that "all central banks are in essence criminal organisations". He adds that the SA Reserve Bank (SARB) is no exception in this regard, "especially since it permitted Dr Nico Diederichs, former Minister of Finance and State President, to loot the Treasury in the 1970s, by allocating to himself an unauthorised commission on all gold sales in Zurich, Switzerland, which in today's values would be the equivalent of over R1-billion. This venality reached unparalleled heights when corrupt SARB officials allowed crooked businessmen and politicians to ransack SA's foreign exchange reserves and strategic gold reserve of 3,000 tons in the 1980s and early 1990s."

In 1977, a former Secretary for Finance, Dr J E Holloway, described the monetary system run by the SARB and the commercial banks as a "colossal fraud".

Since 1994 (when white rule ended altogether, thanks to the treachery of President F.W. de Klerk, for which he was richly rewarded), the financial noose has tightened around SA's neck. "Twenty years of corruption, incompetence and misrule," writes Goodson, "have brought the country to the brink of being declared a failed state." Today, 16 million of the country's 50 million inhabitants are welfare recipients; 50% of the population live below the poverty datum line; government debt is R2-trillion; while 1.3 million taxpayers pay 85% of all taxes."

In the early 1990s Nelson Mandela is believed to have had £20 million on deposit with Barings Bank.

Introducing usury in SA

The steps taken to introduce the usury-and-taxation system in South Africa began soon after WWI, when the Union of South Africa established a central bank. General Smuts as Prime Minister introduced the Income Tax Act in 1914.

With his philosophy of 'Holism', Smuts was a supporter of what is today known as the New World Order, recruited while he studied law at Cambridge University. Later he was befriended by Sir Henry Strakosch, who pushed for a Central Reserve Bank for South Africa. It was the Labour Party which really understood the whole issue, and Goodson gives their arguments in full.

As it turned out, in August 1920, 69 MPs voted for, as against 19 Labour Party + 3 Nationalists voting against, the bill. The South African Reserve Bank (SARB) came into being, and was immediately placed under constant surveillance to ensure it did not deviate from the exploitative paradigm of usury.

A section of the book is devoted to Henry Strakosch and the role he played in the life of Winston Churchill, paying his debts in 1936. From then on, the independent tone of Churchill's writings of the 1920s changed dramatically to servility to 'other interests', especially in his hostility to Germany (which had abandoned the system of usury). When Strakosch died in London in 1943, he expunged Churchill's debt, leaving him and Smuts further large sums.

When the time came for SARB's right to print bank notes which was about to expire in 1944, it was again SA's Labour Party who opposed the bill for SARB's renewal of contract, and placed emphasis instead on Canadian, Australian, New Zealand and German support for the state banking system. Furthermore, during the debate. Albertus Werth (NP) said "This legislation places a tremendous power of life and death over the economic life of the people into private hands – a tremendous weapon for good or evil." He pointed out that New Zealand had bought out its private shareholders, as too had Canada in 1938, and wanted to know why South Africa "is the only one to stick to antiquated legislation." During the third reading of the bill, Werth expressed his fear that "owing to its lack of power of control, the Government will be powerless if those elements controlling huge financial resources should conspire in this country."

This, in fact, was precisely what happened in 1985, writes Goodson, "when Gavin Relly, chairman of Anglo American Corporation, and Willard Butcher, CEO of the Rockefeller-controlled Chase Manhattan Bank, conspired to bring about the downfall of the South African government. Chase Manhattan abruptly refused to roll over the country's short-term foreign loans amounting to $24-billion and with the complicity of the US Fed demanded immediate repayment." It was generally recognized in the 1980s that – rather than 'The Struggle', led and financed by black and Jewish Communist revolutionaries as it was, having been responsible for the capitulation of the National Party elite during the 'negotiations' – it was the country being denied a 'roll-over' of its foreign debt.

In 1994, "the so-called 'Nationalists' handed over the trappings, but not the real power itself to a new set of nomenclatura, whom the international bankers would be able more easily to control and manipulate ... The underlying power base remained unchanged, as it has since 1652, in the hands of a clique of criminal bankers ..." writes Goodson.

Goodson's personal drama

To continue Goodson's personal drama: Amidst his attempts in 2011 to have corruption and incompetence in the SA Bank Note Company and the SA Mint dealt with, the attitude of Marcus became increasingly antagonistic towards him. In February 2012 the Board moved against him to have him silenced and he was suspended. He was expected to remain mute on the measures that had been taken against him by SARB, but he regards the exposure of financial malfeasance as being in the public interest and as not being part of any undertaking.

Contents

Each of the two books in this set has an index and bibliography. There are over 500 footnotes. In the appendices he provides draft legislation for exactly how a sound banking system could be implemented.

Two far-ranging reviews by internationally admired thinkers: Matthew Johnson (USA), and Tomislav Sunic (Croatia) are included. Other reviews have been written since the book was printed, including those by: Kerry Bolton (New Zealand) and Fredrick Töben (Australia). So fascinating and informative are they all, that this reviewer would recommend the inclusion of these latter reviews in future editions, or else that all four be published and distributed as a separate booklet.

Sheriff warns of 'all-out civil war'

SHERIFF Mike Lewis of Wicomico County, Maryland, recently made headlines when he declared that he would not allow the US Federal Government to disarm citizens, and that any attempt on Washington DC's part to do so would lead to "an all-out civil war". Lewis also said that other sheriffs in rural areas of his State "felt the way he did" on the issue. He has previously appeared in a video produced by the conservative Maryland General Assembly. Delegate Mike Smigiel explained to the public how they can legally open-carry firearms.

Wicomico County is in the south-eastern part of Maryland state. Its border with Delaware forms part of the famous Mason-Dixon Line. The county has about 100,000 people and is roughly 64% white, the County Council being composed of six white Republicans and a black Democrat. In contrast, Maryland as a whole has recently been flooded with a vast number of Third World immigrants and Northern transplants, transforming the once-Southern conservative politics of the State. 58% of children in the State under the age of one year are now non-white.

Politics in Maryland is dominated by Baltimore and the heavily populated counties bordering Washington DC.

In response to the demographic and political revolution in Maryland, a movement has sprung up in the western rural counties to secede from the State. Southern nationalists are active in the State.

Predictably, the US media's reporting on the matter is heavily biased against Sheriff Lewis, describing his supporters as the 'right-wing fringe'.

Argentine Congress OKs law restructuring debt payments . . .

THE Argentine Congress has unanimously adopted a new law enabling Buenos Aires to pay back the country's debts to US creditors, sidestepping an earlier US court ruling in favour of the bond-holders. The new plan will allow the government to make debt payments inside the country or elsewhere outside of US jurisdiction.

Argentina's 2001 economic collapse caused the country to default on more than $100-billion in debt. The country is still fighting to deal with the crisis.

Israeli dissidence in military

A large number of Israeli reservists have refused to serve in the army, in protest against the Israeli military's persistent harassment of civilians across the occupied Palestinian territories.

"We, veterans of Unit 8200, reserve soldiers both past and present, declare that we refuse to take part in actions against Palestinians and refuse to continue serving as tools in deepening the military control over the Occupied Territories," said the letter signed by more than 43 veterans of one of Israel's most secretive military intelligence units – many of them still active reservists. "When we were enlisting in the military, we thought our job was going to be minimizing violence, minimizing loss of lives, and that made the moral side of it feel much easier." Sources say the Israeli intelligence operations include targeted assassinations and intrusive surveillance of civilians.

The letter was initially written before the July War on the besieged Gaza Strip, but it was modified later as the death toll in the Gaza Strip jumped.

Respect Syrian sovereignty, warns Russia

THE Russian Federation has warned the US of violating the sovereignty of crisis-hit Syria. Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov (Sept 21, 2014) called on US Secretary of State John Kerry to respect Syria's sovereignty,

The ISIL Takfiri [ISIS] terrorists currently control parts of Syria and Iraq. They have threatened all communities, including Shias, Sunnis, Kurds, Christians, Izadi Kurds and others, as they continue their atrocities in Iraq.

The terrorist group has links with Saudi intelligence and is believed to be indirectly supported by the Israeli regime. [This is confirmed by the fact that wounded ISIS terrorists being treated in Israeli hospitals were visited by PM Benjamin Netanyahu.]

Syria has been gripped by deadly violence since 2011.

Western powers and their regional allies – especially Qatar, Saudi Arabia and Turkey – are reportedly supporting the militants operating inside Syria.

More than 191,000 people have been killed in three years of fighting in the war-ravaged country.

ESTABLISHMENT figures are exhorting Americans to prepare for a '30-year-war' against ISIS [the organization presumed to represent anti-Western Islamic interests].

One of the power structure's greatest achievements has been to maintain almost a thousand military bases around the world, troops in over 100 countries, and endless wars of aggression against various Third World countries simultaneously – all without a draft.

High-tech weaponry, such as drones and precision bombs, and the rise of private, well-paid mercenary armies has allowed the US military/security/surveillance/entertainment complex to pull off the feat.

The rise of ISIS has engendered debate in the alternative media about whether it is Western-financed and trained. The real target all along has been the Syrian government. Writes Dan Glazebrook for counterpunch.org: "And what of the war against Assad? Far from this having been eclipsed by the 'war against ISIS', it is at its foundation. Having been thwarted from bombing Syria in August 2013 by Syrian, Russian, Chinese and Iranian steadfastness – and subsequent parliamentary nervousness in both the US and Britain – the West are now indeed bombing Syria [disguised as airstrikes against Iraq, expanded to Syria]."

We are being told that the West is being 'forced' to intervene in Syria because Assad failed to defeat ISIS, but the truth is precisely the opposite. The West is now in Syria because ISIS and its friends – the recipients of so much lavish diplomatic, financial and military support from the West these past three years – have failed to defeat Assad. For much of 2014, the momentum has been with the Syrian state

BNP Leader quits

There is something profoundly tragic about the collapse of a party with so much promise, and a leader who has been the author of his own downfall . . .

AFTER fifteen mostly wasted years – and having brought the British National Party (BNP) to the brink of extinction – Nick Griffin stepped down as BNP leader following an acrimonious meeting of the party's national executive on 19 July 2014. His former ally Adam Walker became the new BNP leader, pending a leadership election next year among the party's much diminished membership.

Although Griffin insisted the decision was his alone, in reality Griffin's key supporters had deserted him, recognizing that [he] was no longer credible ... Leading the BNP rebellion were former loyal Griffinites ...

As documented in H&D during the past decade, Griffin had regularly purged the BNP of potential rivals and had been prepared to pay the price of shedding high-calibre activists and organisers – destroying party branches and even entire regions. Established activists drained away. By 2014 the illusion could no longer be sustained.

How did the political odyssey of Nick Griffin reach such a grubby terminus?

During the 1970s, led by the dynamic team of John Tyndall and Martin Webster, the National Front was becoming Europe's most successful nationalist party, but by the time Cambridge University educated undergraduate Griffin entered the fray, the NF had already passed its electoral peak, and the Tyndall group broke away to form the New National Front, then the British National Party.

Griffin became part of the editorial committee of the BNP's Nationalism Today. Soon after the 1983 election debacle, Griffin joined a group of 'young radicals' in ousting Webster. The jumble of ideas embraced by the young radicals who had ousted Webster and who derided John Tyndall's BNP as "reactionary" contained an inherent contradiction which quickly became the basis of a bitter split. As the 1986 NF split became more bitter, Griffin began to exhibit the paranoia that was to become ever more evident in his BNP years. In a characteristic rhetorical flourish, Griffin sought to turn his faction's disastrous haemorrhage of members into a positive virtue.

For more than 30 years, nationalists who followed Nick Griffin were to see plenty of purges, setbacks, suffering, sacrifice and eventually ruins. Between 1986 and 1990, Griffin engaged in evermore 'radical' posturing with zero political benefit. His efforts to build revolutionary cadres met with lack of success. By 1989-90 his faction was again splitting. Moving away from electoral politics, he joined colleagues in withdrawing from Britain altogether, focusing their resources on developing a commune in rural France.

A fiasco concerning a printing press, led to Griffin being kept wholly out of anything connected with money.

He returned to mid-Wales, where his wife became the main breadwinner for their four children. His old enemy John Tyndall offered him a deputy-editorship of Spearhead.

During the mid-1990s the BNP was yet again beset by the usual strategic arguments: how far should traditional nationalist ideology be trimmed to avoid allegations of "extremism"? He changed his view more than once.

Finally, John Tyndall became suspicious of Griffin's ambitions after an undercover investigation by ITV's 'Cook Report' broadcast in June 1997. Griffin had been taken in by journalists posing as French nationalists, and had given them an outline of his plans to take over the British nationalist movement. The supposed French nationalists claimed to have money to donate, so naturally Griffin kept this potentially lucrative contact to himself, not consulting his national employer John Tyndall, nor even other British nationalists well informed on the French scene.

The Times printed an article in May 1999 on 'Britain's Nazis', saying that "Griffin believes in new alliances, modifying the party's official stance on immigration." The 2001 race riots in Oldham effectively made Griffin's political fortune.

Yet for several years after winning the party leadership, Griffin concentrated on a 'modernising' strategy, contradicting virtually all of his previous ideological pronouncements. At the time of his death in July 2005, John Tyndall was officially proscribed from the party he founded, though pursuing legal action for reinstatement. That was merely the start of a pattern that was to scar Griffin's entire leadership.

One after another, local BNP breakthroughs were consumed by the locusts of Griffinism. On numerous occasions Griffin's pathological plotting landed him in legal difficulties, including several disputes with fellow nationalists, one of whom said that "Griffin genuinely believes he is untouchable and above the law. One wonders whether Mr Griffin would exercise more moderation were he obliged to fund his incessant court costs from his own wallet?"

The writer of this article concludes with the question: "Will the BNP prove to be worth saving? My guess is that the BNP's time is over and that whatever potential it possessed has now been irrecoverably wasted."

Later development

JUST two months after being ousted as BNP chairman – and four months after losing his seat in the European Parliament – Nick Griffin was expelled from the BNP on October 1, 2014.

His paranoia cost the party most of its best activists and officials, and eventually accrued enormous debts including unpaid legal bills.

In January 2014 he was bankrupted for the second time for non-payment of his own solicitors. Other legal costs ran well into six figures.

Subsequently, in a series of letters, emails and interviews, Griffin set out to destabilise his successors in the BNP.

FRANCE

"CHARLIE HEBDO"

IN an event as dramatic as the murder of 17 people in Paris on 15th January this year, various experts look at the background of the role players, in an attempt to solve the riddles and anomalies of why the atrocity was committed, and who benefitted . . .

Was it blasphemy?

THE demand for Blasphemy Laws on the part of extremist Moslems is questioned by Fareed Zakaria (a Time Magazine editor), who wrote on 9 January:

"As they went on their rampage, the men who murdered 12 people in Paris this week yelled they had "avenged the Prophet." They follow in the path of other terrorists who have bombed newspaper offices, stabbed a filmmaker, and killed writers and translators – all to mete out what they believe is the proper Quranic punishment for blasphemy.

"In fact, the Quran prescribes no punishment for blasphemy. Like so many of the most fanatical and violent aspects of Islamic terrorism today, the idea that Islam requires insults to Muhammad be met with violence is a creation of politicians and clerics, serving a political agenda."

France in a bad way

NOT only is France plagued by labour union demands as bad as in South Africa, but massive protests have been held in France recently . . .

THE Institute of Directors said: "France is living on borrowed time ... Foreign direct investment in France has fallen by more than 90% since 2005. Hollande's government has been a disaster."

Official figures show the French economy as being the second largest in Europe behind Germany, but "Europe is being held back by its second-largest economy." Unemployment in France remains stuck above 10%, with more than 3-million people out of work. France's new economics minister admitted in September: "France is sick. It's not well. We have to describe the situation as it is."

Once famed for its stylishness, Paris is blighted today by beggars, drug gangs and petty crime. Aggressive beggars are everywhere, visitors are harassed or mugged. Drug pushers surround the Gare du Nord, the main Paris station. Police are stretched to the extreme by the situation.

Thus far, mainstream personalities have avoided putting a finger on the prime cause of this malaise: First, Western (foremost the U.S. power elite), through their influence on the European Union, are getting laws passed which force countries like France to admit a flood of unemployable immigrants into the country. Secondly, there is the demoralisation of the French people confronted by these millions of non-French immigrants invading their country.

Warnings about Israel & Palestine

FRANCE has warned its citizens against taking part in any economic activity in the occupied Palestinian territories, saying this could entail legal risks because the Jewish settlements are illegal under international law. The warning is part of a joint act drafted by the five largest EU countries, Germany, Britain, France, Italy and Spain, Haaretz cited a French diplomat as saying.

The notice by the French Foreign Ministry advises against investing, purchasing land, or engaging in economic activity in the West Bank, East Jerusalem and Golan Heights. It was published in recommendations for French people travelling to Israel.

The document also stated that the international community does not recognize the settlements as part of Israel, IMPACT OCTOBER 2014 – JANUARY 2015 which could lead to “land disputes or disagreements regarding water or other natural resources.”

Over the past year, Europe’s private sector and Israeli businesses that work in the settlements have seen boycotts of their goods and services.

The Dutch government has recently issued a similar warning to its citizens, with recommendations that products from the settlements on sale in supermarkets are to be marked. Shortly afterwards, the largest water company in The Netherlands declared that it was canceling a contract with Mekorot, Israel’s national water company.

Jihad attacks kill 17

SO-CALLED jihadists took to a wave of killing, such as the twelve murdered at the Charlie Hebdo weekly satirical magazine office in mid-January this year, and also the police and civilians murdered in a hostage drama in a kosher shop the next day, with a total of 17 dead, plus three of the perpetrators.

First reports (e.g. those on SABC Radio) told of jihadists entering a Jewish synagogue in Paris, but no one was hurt. These reports were later deleted from all news reports.

What was curious was that more than a million people congregated in one of the Paris squares in double-quick time, with President Francois Hollande welcoming foreign ministers and ambassadors to a huge get-together ostensibly to mourn the 17 deaths. Nothing like this was ever arranged for the 9-11 dead, or various train hostage crimes anywhere. What was so special about the Charlie Hebdo deaths and those at the kosher shop? A clue might be found in the lengthy statement of a member of the public in the million-person gathering apparently chosen at random, and broadcast on SABC TV news. This man emphasized “how many Jews had been killed by the Nazis,” saying “I was the only survivor of my family, who were all killed.” Does this mean that the Hollande gathering of the clans in Paris was really about Jews. Were those killed all Jews?

Did ‘Charlie’ attacks save Hollande?

A world-known journalist, part-Jewish, part-Moslem, gives us an excellent view of the backdrop of France and its leaders in the period leading up to and just after the Charlie Hebdo killings . . .

TWO weeks ago, French President Francois Hollande’s popularity polls were below 10%, making Hollande the most unpopular, derided leader of France in memory. Unemployment kept rising, the ruling Socialists can’t seem to cut the bloated budget, and just about everyone in France was angry at Hollande.

The rightist National Front of Marine le Pen was expected to oust the left in forthcoming elections in 2017.

The demoralized Hollande even publicly mused about not serving out his term. Then, in one of life’s amazing surprises, everything changed for him.

Two French of Algerian descent, the by now notorious Kouachi brothers, and a black African radical launched two deadly attacks in Paris, massacring the staff of the satirical magazine Charlie Hebdo.

The attack on “Charlie” was not a surprise: it and a rightwing Danish newspaper had made their name demeaning and mocking Islam. “Charlie” was reportedly owned or financed by a French Rothschild. No reason has so far been given for the mindless killing of four Jewish shoppers.

France and much of the western world erupted in high moral outrage over the gave him a new lease of political life.

Freedom of opinion?

Hollande and the National Assembly lost no time in announcing that France would increase and intensify its military operations in Mali, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Central African Republic, East Africa, Abu Dhabi, Iraq, Afghanistan (from where French troops have been withdrawing), as well as covert operations in Syria, Lebanon and Somalia. In fact, Hollande has been advocating French military intervention in Africa and Asia for much of his term.

The mayhem in Paris certainly reminded many of America’s 9/11 ordeal. In both cases, a floundering, lackluster leader was suddenly catapulted into the role of national champion and heroic war lord. Hollande is milking the Paris massacre for all its worth.

Meanwhile, the hypocrisy of all the ado about free speech is beginning to sink in. We learn that “Charlie Hebdo” fired one of its cartoonists for mocking the son of Sarkozy’s marriage to a wealthy Jewish heiress. A French-African not very funny comic faced charges of anti-Semitism.

Pro-Palestinian marches in Paris were banned by the free speech government. In France, questioning details of the Holocaust is a crime. The Armenian genocide of World War I is similarly taboo. France has seriously violated its own noble tradition of free speech while hectoring others to observe it.

How all this works out in the end for Hollande’s Socialists remains unclear. A short-term boost for sure. But the far right is on the march. It’s calls to “do something” about France’s 6 million Muslims and bring in draconian laws as America did post 9/11 have much resonance. “Do what?” is the question most French are not yet willing to face.

There is a disconnect between political leaders and their citizens

Within days of the shootings, a formidable list of international attendees gathered in Paris. How could such global figures have so quickly prepared for the trip? First media pictures show them marching in front of the millions on the Paris square. That has proved to be photo-montage, because there was no contact between the two groups. The heads of state were transported down a side street, then they followed Hollande up the steps of a small palace where they apparently conferred in a hall for 30 minutes. Then they left the building, got into their cars, and went home.

Paris massacre. Defending the sacred right of free speech was declared a holy war. Politicians fell over themselves to join the crusade of the righteous – even Israel’s Bibi Netanyahu, who had just killed over 2,000 Palestinians, including some 15 journalists.

Hollande went overnight from being a befuddled little man to male Joan of Arc and defender of liberty. All France rallied to the embattled president and

Scepticism

THERE is widespread scepticism about the authenticity of mainstream reports on the Paris atrocity . . .

SIGNS of an inside job and a still unfolding cover-up are significant, from pristine, undamaged passports found on the scene (similar to the passport of a ‘perpetrator’ found on the scene of 9/11), to the convenient suicide of Helric Fredou, the Paris police commissioner in charge of the Hebdo investigation.

The Kouachi brothers and Amedy Coulibaly were well known to French authorities, French intelligence and the CIA. The Kouachis were tracked and monitored – guided – over the course of many years, arrested many times, yet were allowed to continue training and plotting with fellow Al-Qaeda in Iraq, Yemen, Syria, etc. These are telltale signs of a guided military-intelligence operation. A blatantly obvious terror cell, known to authorities, 'drops out of sight', and then is set loose at an appropriate moment. And then executed.

None of these things, which alarm seasoned observers, registers among the emotional masses. As noted by Paul Craig Roberts, there is a reason why the Charlie Hebdo attack took place when it did:

"France is suffering from the Washington-imposed sanctions against Russia. Shipyards are impacted from being unable to deliver Russian orders due to France's vassalage status to Washington; and other aspects of the French economy are being adversely impacted by sanctions which Washington forced its NATO puppet states to apply to Russia."

The French president said recently that the sanctions against Russia should end (so did the German vice-chancellor).

tember 1978 for Flight 825's passengers and crew at Salisbury's Anglican Cathedral, Dean John de Costa delivered a sermon damning what he described as a "deafening silence from overseas ... deafened with the voices of protest from nations who call themselves civilised? The ghastliness of this ill-fated flight from Kariba will be burned upon our memories for years to come."

International Disgrace

It is a matter of international disgrace that the United States government, the British Foreign office, the European Union, the United Nations, the Pope, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Organisation of African Unity, all failed to condemn the shooting down and murdering of innocent passengers on these internal civilian flights in Rhodesia.

Lest We Forget

There is a monument at Voortrekkerhoogte which lists the names of the victims of these terror attacks. It reads: "This memorial is to commemorate the lives of 107 holiday makers and crew murdered in the world's first 9/11 styled attacks to destroy passenger aircraft in flight, when Air Rhodesia Viscounts Hunyani and Umnati were brought down with Sam-7 missiles on leaving Kariba airport on 3 September 1978 and 12 February 1979." Of 18 passengers who survived the Viscount Hunyani crash, 8 escaped, while 10 others, mostly women and children, were bayoneted and shot to death. There were no survivors of the Umnati crash."

Deafening silence about atrocities in Rhodesia (1979)

THE shoot-down of Air Malaysia Flight MH-17 over Donetsk, Ukraine, killing all 298 passengers on board, and the 17 Charlie Hebdo murders in Paris evoked worldwide shock and condemnation. But an earlier atrocity called forth no such reaction . . .

Air Rhodesia's Viscounts

DEAFENING silence followed the terrorist shoot-down of Air Rhodesia Flight 825, a scheduled passenger flight that was shot down by Zimbabwe Peoples Revolutionary Army (ZIPRA) insurgents on 3 September 1978, during the war against Rhodesia. The aircraft involved a Vickers Viscount named the Hunyani, was flying the last leg of Air Rhodesia's regular scheduled internal flight from Victoria Falls to the capital, Salisbury, via the tourist resort town of Kariba.

Survivors bayoneted

Soon after Flight 825 took off, a group of ZIPRA guerrillas scored a direct hit on its starboard wing with a Soviet-made Strela 2 surface-to-air infra-red homing missile, critically damaging the aircraft and forcing an emergency landing. An attempted crash landing in a field just West of Karoi was foiled by an unseen ditch, which caused the aircraft to cartwheel and break up. Of the 52 passengers and 4 crew, 38 died in this crash.

The insurgents then approached the wreckage, rounded up the 10 survivors they could find and bayoneted, or shot, them. Eight other passengers survived because they had gone to look for water and help.

Communists Claimed Credit

ZIPRA leader Joshua Nkomo publicly claimed responsibility for shooting down the Viscount on BBC television the same evening. Five months later, in February 1979, the communist terrorists shot down another Rhodesian Viscount, Flight 827, another civilian flight, in a similar atrocity.

To Understand the Ferguson Riots Look to Africa

THE recent riots in Ferguson, Missouri, raised many questions, especially because of the conflicting reports the world heard. The editor of American Renaissance (now on line) lays out the facts in a definitive manner. The lessons of Ferguson are important for the whole white world . . .

THE con works like this. Blacks claim racism. They scream and demonstrate. Their leaders fly in to pump up the excitement. The lickspittle press clucks about oppression. Lickspittle whites join the demonstrations. Eventually the facts come out, and they are nothing like what was initially claimed – but it makes no difference. Blacks are so drunk on indignation that facts don't matter, and whites are so drunk on self-righteousness they can't see they were flimflammed. We've seen this over and over ... America's never-ending stream of hate-crime hoaxes. Why do we always fall for the same trick? First, we have Africa in our midst. Second, our rulers don't realize we have Africa in our midst.

It may be that the police shooting of

Michael Brown in Ferguson, Missouri, which touched off a week of black riots, was unjustified. But let us recall the very first version of events – the one that sent blacks screaming into the streets.

Brown's pal, Dorian Johnson, went on the air and claimed that he and Brown were walking in the middle of the street, a white cop told them to get on the sidewalk, and then blazed away at Brown when he refused. He says Brown had his hands in the air and was saying "I don't have a gun. Don't shoot", when the cop poured lead into him from 20 or 30 feet away.

There is probably not a single sworn peace officer anywhere in the United States who would shoot an unarmed man with his hands in the air from 20 feet away ... But that is what the press reported – along with a vague police account of a struggle for the officer's gun – and it sent thousands of people into the streets running around with their arms in the air, pretending to be an innocent black man about to be shot.

Evidence emerging

The essential point is that the public doesn't yet know what happened – though there is evidence now coming out that looks bad for the six-foot four-inch, 294-pound 'gentle giant', as his admirers now no longer call him. He was high on marijuana, had just committed a strong-arm robbery, may have fractured the white cop's eye socket in a struggle, and may have been charging straight for the officer when he was shot.

An even more important point is that a huge number of blacks don't care what happened. An early Rasmussen poll found that 57% of blacks think the officer who did the shooting – Darren Wilson – should be found guilty of murder. The figure for whites was 17%. Brown's mother says Officer Wilson should be arrested, tried, convicted, and given the death penalty. The Black Panthers are leading groups of blacks in responsive chant: "What's his name? Darren Wilson. How do we want him? Dead." The head of the local NAACP chapter issued a press release, saying, "Yet another teenaged boy has been slaughtered by law enforcement."

Al Sharpton, Jesse Jackson, and the head of the NAACP have jetted in to demand 'justice'. Not one of them has pointed out that there are at least three investigations going on – federal, county, and police department – and that there should be no baying for blood until the facts are known. Attorney General Eric Holder, who arrived to join the tub-thumping, has sent no fewer than 40 FBI agents to Ferguson to find out what happened ...

As for Officer Wilson, we have a procedure for deciding, first, whether to indict him and, second, if he is guilty.

Prosecutors present the known evidence to a grand jury. If they find probable cause, they vote to indict. At trial, witnesses for both sides are examined and cross examined in open court. Only then does a jury determine guilt or innocence. This is a Western procedure which evolved over many centuries, and is designed to be as fair as possible. It is based on the presumption of innocence ... It derives, in other words, from a deliberative, reasoned approach to the truth that is obviously alien to large numbers of blacks ...

By the time the press gets anything like the whole picture, blacks have already swallowed a fantastic tale of 'racism' and have been rampaging for weeks ...

Out of Africa

In Ferguson, African-Americans are acting like Africans rather than Americans. Presumptions of innocence, rules of evidence, and deliberative justice are about as rare on the street as they are south of the Sahara. Africa is notorious for mob justice ... Witch-hunting is so common you can now see it on YouTube. UNICEF reports that more Africans than ever believe in witchcraft.

In Africa, hit-and-run is a safety measure. If you stop to help, the crowd is likely to kill you. That nearly happened right here in America when Steve Utash, who was driving through Detroit, stopped to help a child who had jumped in front of his car. He was very nearly murdered by a black crowd. This was not ruled a hate crime – it's just what blacks do, apparently.

Is there any doubt what would happen to Officer Darren Wilson if the blacks on the streets of Ferguson got their hands on him? We have riots and blood lust rather than orderly procedure because we have Africa in our midst.

Whites refuse to wake up

Another reason why we have riots is because whites refuse to understand that we have Africa in our midst. The official view is that the Ferguson rioters might as well be white people except that "they're victims of society". Our rulers tell us that looting and arson are regrettable but "understandable expressions of legitimate black rage".

In one of the many insights in his classic Why Race Matters Michael Levin writes that most whites don't realize what drives so much black anger, hysteria, delusions, envy, and just plain hatred. Whites see furious blacks, and assume they could not possibly be so angry unless they had legitimate grievances. That is why the media lard their coverage of the riots with hand-wringing over bad schools and downtrodden neighbourhoods, and 60- and 70-year-old tales of white racism.

Whites will never understand anything until they realize that blacks are different, that they bring their misery upon themselves, and that blaming whites and making excuses only makes blacks angrier and more reckless.

But it was Captain Ronald Johnson of the Missouri State Highway Patrol who takes the prize for idiotic comments. He is the black officer who was rolled out to bring calm when it seemed whites couldn't do the job. He couldn't seem to decide whether he was a policeman or Al Sharpton.

In a church packed with blacks, and in what the New York Times called "the cadences of a preacher", he said: "My heart goes out to you, and I say that I'm sorry. I wear the uniform and I should stand up here and say that I'm sorry." At a service for Michael Brown in a different church, he said we should all be thankful to the young man's family because "Brown's death will make it better for our sons so they can be better black men."

Looting and torching

... [Someone], fresh from looting a store on a recent night told reporters, "I'm proud of us. We deserve this, and this is what's supposed to happen when there's injustice in your community."

Clearly, Michael Brown has become an excuse, not just to go looting but to chant "Time to kill a cop" at the police, throw bottles of urine at them, set off Molotov cocktails, and maybe even get a few seconds of TV time. "If it wasn't for the looting," said one man, "we wouldn't get the attention."

Mobs – complaining of 'Stolen Lives' – torch buildings, loot, threaten the police and public, set off Molotov cocktails. In South Africa, mobs kill 'foreign' shop-owners

Besides the businesses that have been burned down or stripped clean, businesses in the area, including medical practices, have seen hardly any customers for a week. Schools that were supposed to open have remained closed.

But let us return to what this means for our institutions. The Ferguson police already broke procedure when they released the robbery video. It was a small point, but it was a sacrifice to Africa in our midst. There will be more ...

When the case goes to trial, what juror will not recall the 50 deaths that followed the acquittal of the police who beat Rodney King [years ago]? What juror will not recall the insults heaped on the jurors who acquitted George Zimmerman? It will do no good to move the trial to a different jurisdiction. Officer Darren Wilson will not get a fair trial unless it takes place on the moon. This is another sacrifice to Africa.

In the long run, as Africa and other parts of the Third World expand in our midst, it will become harder and harder for any of our basic European institutions to function. We are slipping back towards corruption and the rule of brute power. Africa may always be in our midst, but unless our rulers understand what that means, many Fergusons are in our future.

RACE-BASED JUSTICE

Other comments about the Ferguson drama by a well-known commentator . . .

AMONG the demands of the 'protestors' in Ferguson is that the investigation and prosecution of police officer Darren Wilson be taken away from St Louis County Prosecutor Robert McCulloch. McCulloch is biased, it is said. How so? In 1964, his father, a St Louis police officer, was shot to death by an African-American.

State Governor Nixon has demanded the 'vigorous prosecution' of a cop who has not even been charged, and by calling repeatedly for 'justice for Brown's family', but not Wilson's.

What has been going on for two weeks now in Ferguson is the ceaseless vilification of Darren Wilson and the clamour to arrest him. It is anti-American. It is a mob howl for summary judgment.

Various facts have emerged ... *Fifteen minutes before the shooting, Brown was caught on videotape manhandling and menacing a clerk at a convenience store he was robbing. *A woman called a radio station to say that Brown and Wilson fought in the patrol car and Brown had gone for the officer's gun, which went off. *St Louis County police leaked the fact that Wilson had been beaten severely in the face and suffered a fracture of an eye socket.

If there is any public official who should reclude himself from any role in this investigation, it is not Robert McCulloch, but Eric Holder, who has an obsession with race. Three weeks in office, he declared America a "nation of cowards" for refusing to discuss race more. Arriving in St Louis, he declared, "I am the Attorney General of the United States. But I am also a black man." ... Any defense lawyer would have Eric Holder tossed out of a jury pool.

HATE CRIMES

THE MEDIA NEVER REPORTS

DETAILS of black-on-white crimes throughout the USA are given in the Citizens Informer (May August 2014), such as a mob attack on two white couples in McDonalds next to Texas A&M University. Two of the white victims died. It took two years for the public to learn about it. Major media bosses now openly admit censoring black crime in the USA.

Other black-on-white murders listed include mob attacks, random abductions, a killing spree in Kansas City.

The article lists some of the crimes, including an Oklahoma incident where a white female pedestrian was killed "for the fun of it"; white policemen killed by blacks; a radio personality killed in Times Square; teenage white female stabbed to death; motorcyclist; multiple white pedestrians attacked randomly; white students attacked and killed; a homeless man killed by a 12-year-old black boy.

Week-by-week the known crimes are listed, censored by the media, from June to September, numbering 46 dead.

THE FALL OF CIVILIZATIONS

DO civilizations die because non-whites are permitted to infiltrate, remain within, and gradually dominate white societies, bringing about a moral collapse?

Or does declining morality in white societies lead them to let down their guard and let in non-whites, which hastens and precipitates their downfall.

Are these just stages of ongoing cycles in all civilizations, as Spengler and Yockey proposed? Is a return to white racial consciousness necessary to reverse the retrograde movement and begin a healthy new cycle, or must the cycle run its full course?

Examining history through these lenses could lead to a better understanding of history and allow us to take remedial measures to engender optimism and turn things around now.

SEARCH FOR SOLUTIONS

LET us focus on the disastrous failure of racial policy. For over half a century we [Americans] have had many Fergusons, mini-Fergusons, mega-Fergusons (Los Angeles, among others), and the Knockout Game (micro-Fergusons). We will have more and worse. Racial hostility is not subsiding. The races are not assimilating. If they were going to, they would have done so.

... The race industry stokes the fires by telling blacks they are victims, and some seem actually to be looking for a fight. Jesse Jackson is quoted as threatening, "There is a Ferguson near you." Wherever blacks and whites come into contact, there is trouble.

... As long as white policemen work in black neighbourhoods, Fergusons will continue. Blacks see white policemen as hostile occupiers, agents of an alien, hostile race ...

The obvious, inexpensive, simple, practical solution would be to have only black police in black neighbourhoods, and white in white. This wouldn't end shootings because it wouldn't end crime, but it would end the consequent racial riots, looting, and burned cities. I suggested this when I was a police writer for The Washington Times, but was told that it ran against the policy of compulsory integration. Black cops didn't like the idea because it would leave them in the most dangerous jurisdictions.

Separate people

We need to realize, but will not, that blacks are a separate people, self-aware and cohesive. They have their own dialect, music and modes of dress.

The races spring from utterly different cultures. Compulsory integration is thus a form of social imperialism in which whites try to force blacks to conform to European norms. Blacks have no historical connection at all to Greece, Rome, Christianity, the Middle Ages, the Enlightenment, Industrial Revolution, to Newton, LaGrange, or Galois, to the philosophic tradition of Thales, Aquinas, Schopenhauer or Hegel. Nor do Eurowhites have roots in Africa. No commonality exists.

We talk multiculturalism, but try to impose a monoculture. Why? Why in school should we insist that blacks study things of no interest to them? It is reminiscent of policies aimed at stripping American Indians of their languages and traditions.

On the other hand, I as a white man have little enthusiasm for studying Shaka Zulu, the Great Zimbabwe, or African religions. Would not all be happier with their own schools, in which they could maintain their own culture?

"Separate but equal" is in bad odour as a governing philosophy, but it seems to be the only one that works. If voluntary, wherein lies the evil? Less contact means less conflict.

Is there any evidence that blacks want to associate with whites? Or vice versa? In the universities, do blacks not clamour for black-only dormitories, black-only fraternities, and Black Studies? And what is wrong with this? Why should blacks not associate with whom they choose? And why should not whites?

Almost always, when the races do not have to mingle, they don't. In Washington, blacks fleeing the crime of the city go to the heavily-black Prince George's County, whites to Arlington, Fairfax and Bethesda. Within Arlington, blacks cluster together in mini-barrios. So what? It's their business.

Hypocrisy of the race-mixers

Note that the togetherheid pushed endlessly on us is almost entirely rhetorical, preached by people who mean that others should practise it. I lived for years in Washington, DC, with many liberal, racially-correct friends. They spent all their time with other whites, and the restaurants and bars they patronized seldom had more than a token black, if that.

Ethnic mixing doesn't work, gang. Not Moslems and Parisians, Irish Catholics and Protestants, Shias and Sunnis, Indonesians and Chinese, nor even New Yorkers and Alabamans. We think it should work, insist that it will, punish those who observe that it doesn't. Yet still it doesn't work. The greater the difference between groups, the less well it works. If we realized this, and let people do as they choose, the country would be much better off.

Africa Calling

AN article appeared in The Christian Science Monitor (April 4th, 2014) by CHRIS STEIN, entitled 'Back to Africa? For some African-Americans, the answer is Yes'.

The Racial Nationalist Party of America (RNPA) is a principal proponent of black repatriation. Does simply being pro-white mean that one is a 'hate group'? Does advocating black repatriation necessarily make one anti-black?

Positive examples

Let's consider the case of Jimmy Thorne. He is a black, quoted in Chris Stein's article, who claims relocating to Ghana eight years ago was one of the best moves he'd ever made.

Life has been good to Jimmy Thorne since he relocated to Africa. Ghana is his home now. He found a wife, reconnected to God, and manages to play golf daily. According to Thorne, "Once you accept it as your home, why wouldn't you stay in your home? This is where we came from originally, so maybe that's why we're here. Maybe it's divine providence."

Imahkus Okofu moved to Ghana from New York City 24 years ago. He runs a health spa in his African homeland and has authored a number of books on black repatriation. According to Okofu: "Wherever it is we find ourselves, in Africa is where we should be."

Otis Davis moved to Ghana in 2011. He says he loves his new home. He is the president of the African-American Association, an organization that assists others who have repatriated. His son, Ezra, visited his father and now plans to stay. "It's not really just about money, you have the ability to create something, to contribute."

Marcus Garvey (1887-1940) was one of the pioneer black leaders who advocated repatriation. He had over two million blacks enlisted in his 'Back to Africa' movement. Unfortunately, there were, and still are, powerful forces that did not want to see that happen, and Garvey was railroaded to prison.

The RNPA will support legislation that would assist other blacks to repatriate, and to offer aid packages to those African nations who open their doors to American blacks.

Racial Nationalist Party

WE do not know what the opinion of Dr MYLES MUNROE was about repatriation, but his views, generally, seem to have been eminently sensible. This black promotional writer and speaker, interviewed during a recent visit of his to South Africa, emphasized the need for people to have a sense of identity, solid character, and consistency. He deplored the globalist mindset in which personal self-worth was sacrificed.

Sadly, on his return home to the Bahamas two weeks later, he was killed in an aircraft accident. Impact

'A Europe of Nations'

Marcus Willinger is an Austrian political writer, aged 22. His new book is an indictment of Europe's current rulers. In 32 chapters he catalogues the many ways in which the EU has betrayed the interests of the nations it rules.

EU thinking: "No work in Sn Europe? Then the Sn Europeans should simply go north. Simply leave their relations, friends, loved ones, homes, and roots behind." It was this naive economism which led them to believe that a common currency would guarantee unity and internal peace. It has done just the opposite. As a consequence of its high productivity, Germany is forced to subsidize less productive states, rewarding them for their lower productivity. Germans see the transaction as parasitic; Greeks see it as a violation of their sovereignty. Both parties are correct. As is so often the case, forced proximity led to mistrust, rage, and conflict. We need to awaken the nations from their trance.

Summary of Vladimir Putin's speech at the Valdai conference in Sochi

EVEN though Western media did their best to ignore it or to twist its meaning, this is probably the most important political speech (October 24, 2014) since Churchill's "Iron Curtain" speech of March 5, 1946. In it, Putin abruptly changed the rules of the game.

Previously, the game of international politics was played as follows: Politicians made public pronouncements, for the sake of maintaining a pleasant fiction of national sovereignty, but they were strictly for show and had nothing to do with the substance of international politics. In the meantime, they engaged in secret back-room negotiations, in which the actual deals were hammered out. Previously, Putin tried to play this game, expecting only that Russia be treated as an equal. But these hopes have been dashed, and at this conference he declared the game to be over, explicitly violating Western taboo by speaking directly to the people over the heads of elite clans and political leaders.

The Russian blogger Chipstone summarized the most salient points of the speech as follows:

1. Russia will no longer play games and engage in back-room negotiations over trifles. But Russia is prepared for serious conversations and agreements, if these are conducive to collective security, are based on fairness, and take into account the interests of each side.
2. All systems of global collective security now lie in ruins. There are no longer any international security guarantees at all. And the entity that destroyed them has a name: The United States of America.
3. The builders of the New World Order have failed, having built a sand castle. Whether or not a new world order of any sort is to be built is not just Russia's decision, but it is a decision that will not be made without Russia.
4. Russia favors a conservative approach to introducing innovations into the social order, but is not opposed to investigating and discussing such innovations, to see if introducing any of them might be justified.
5. Russia has no intention of going fishing in the murky waters created by America's ever-expanding "empire of chaos," and has no interest in building a new empire of her own. This is unnecessary; Russia's challenges lie in developing her already vast territory. Neither is Russia willing to act as a savior of the world, as she had in the past.
6. Russia will not attempt to reformat the world in her own image, but neither will she allow anyone to reformat her in their image. Russia will not close herself off from the world, but anyone who tries to close her off from the world will be sure to reap a whirlwind.
7. Russia does not wish for the chaos to spread, does not want war, and has no intention of starting one. However, today Russia sees the outbreak of global war as almost inevitable, is prepared for it, and is continuing to prepare for it. Russia does not war—nor does she fear it.
8. Russia does not intend to take an active role in thwarting those who are still attempting to construct their New World Order—until their efforts start to impinge on Russia's key interests. Russia would prefer to stand by and watch them give themselves as many lumps as their poor heads can take. But those who manage to drag Russia into this process, through disregard for her interests, will be taught the true meaning of pain.
9. In her external, and, even more so, internal politics, Russia's power will rely not on the elites and their back-room dealing, but on the will of the people.

To these nine points I would like to add a tenth:

10. There is still a chance to construct a new world order that will avoid a world war. This new world order must of necessity include the United States – but can only do so on the same terms as everyone else: subject to international law and international agreements; refraining from all unilateral action; in full respect of the sovereignty of other nations.

Chipstone sums it all up: Play-time is over. Children, put away your toys. Now is the time for the adults to make decisions. Russia is ready for this; is the world?

JEWISH RESPONSES TO THE EU ELECTIONS

A widely-known American analyst, in a sober, factual article, provides insight into Jewish responses to the May 2014 European elections . . .

It's no secret that Jewish organizations have been strongly in favour of the E.U. and its policies promoting immigration and multiculturalism. So it's no surprise that they are quite negative about the results of the elections for the European Parliament.

A Jerusalem Post article gives some reactions. Hungary's Jobbik and Greece's Golden Dawn are seen as the most worrisome.

The American Jewish Committee bemoaned the fact that Jobbik is now the second largest Hungarian party in the continental legislature, while Greece's Golden Dawn ... is now in the parliament for the first time; and that Austria's hard right FPÖ party came in third with just over a fifth of the vote, obtaining four seats.

Daniel Schwammthal, Director of the AJC Transatlantic Institute, said that while the "extent to which these parties will be able to unite to influence European policy remains to be seen," their presence in the legislature will still "at a minimum, provide a soapbox from which to propagate their vile hatred."

Uninterested in facts

There is no recognition in any of the comments that immigration and multiculturalism are resulting in legitimate fears that the traditional peoples and cultures are being displaced throughout the continent. Blame is placed on governments for not being aggressive enough against these parties, suggesting an ominous scenario where governments aggressively impose sanctions on these parties, as happened in Greece ...

"The alarming successes of extremist parties in these elections is the result of the passivity of European leaders and governments to deal with real issues facing European citizens," European Jewish Congress President Dr Moshe Kantor said. According to Roger Cukierman, head of CRIF, a French Jewish umbrella body, the election results are especially worrying in light of the anti-Semitic attacks in Brussels and Créteil (southeast of Paris) where two Jewish men were attacked on Saturday. "We are very worried."

Benjamin Albalas, head of the Central Board of Greek Jewish Communities, also warned about the results:

"It is not only very disappointing that Golden Dawn saw a significant rise in its share of the vote – winning three seats in the European Parliament – but also that other extreme-right parties in Greece and beyond did so well in the elections."

The Simon Wiesenthal Centre's Efraim Zuroff stated:

"The elections could be the beginning of a new and very dangerous era in which openly fascist and anti-Semitic parties might attain entrée into government coalitions, which would significantly change the current constellation of political power in such a way that could seriously jeopardize the future of European Jewish communities."

Marriage of convenience

As in the U.S., Jewish groups have strongly encouraged non-white immigration. And, just as in the U.S., they are looking to non-white immigrants as allies in their struggle against the nationalism of European peoples. Moslem groups are more than happy to oblige.

Some Jewish leaders see a silver lining in the election results, however, postulating that the rise of the far-right may catalyse European Jews and Moslems to work together.

After the European vote, the Gathering of European Moslems and Jewish Leaders -- an interfaith group affiliated with the American Foundation for Ethnic Understanding -- vowed to "work closely together to fight Islamophobia, anti-Semitism and xenophobia, and prevent the far-right parties from realizing their goal of passing a common legislative agenda in the European Parliament severely restricting the rights of religious minorities."

"Just as European Moslem and Jewish leaders joined forces in recent months, we will now stand together and speak with one voice against efforts by the extremist parties to implement their hateful agenda," FFEU founder, Rabbi Marc Schneider, said.

Imam Ahmed Miktar, president of the Association of the Imams of France and a member of the GEMJL, agreed, stating that to succeed in protecting the rights of religious minorities, "we must learn to work together effectively on both the grass roots and leadership levels, Moslems and Jews. Our communities can no longer afford the luxury of standing apart."

Europeans' legitimate interests

Again, what is missing in this opposition is any glimmering that native Europeans have a legitimate interest in preserving their culture and demographic dominance in areas they have inhabited for thousands of years. The policies advocated by Jewish organizations will result in the death of European civilization.

Needless to say, there is no similar sentiment among Jewish organizations for multiculturalism and non-Jewish immigration in Israel.

MASSIVE 9/11 EVIDENCE BEING INVESTIGATED

THE tragedy of September 11, 2001, goes far beyond the deaths of those who died in the towers and the deaths of fire-fighters and first responders who succumbed to illnesses caused by inhalation of toxic dust. A generation of Americans has been born into continuous warfare while the needs of citizens go unmet . . .

ACCORDING to the official story, on September 11, 2001, the much vaunted National Security State of the World's Only Superpower was defeated by a few young Saudi Arabians armed only with box cutters. The American NSI State proved to be totally helpless and was dealt the greatest humiliation ever inflicted on any country claiming to be a power.

- * That day no aspect of the National Security State worked. Everything failed.
- * The US Air Force, for the first time in its history, could not get interceptor jet fighters into the air.
- * The National Security Council failed.
- * All sixteen US intelligence agencies failed, as did those of America's NATO and Israeli allies.
- * All air traffic control failed.
- * Airport security failed four times at the same moment on the same day. The probability of such a failure is zero.

If such a thing had actually happened, there would have been demands from the White House, from Congress, and from the media for an investigation. Officials would have been held accountable for their failures. Heads would have rolled.

Instead, the White House resisted for one year the 9/11 families' demands for an investigation. Finally, a collection of politicians was assembled to listen to the government's account and to write it down. The chairman, vice chairman, and legal counsel of the 9/11 Commission have said that information was withheld from the commission, lies were told to the commission, and that the commission 'was set up to fail'. The worst security failure in history resulted in not a single firing. No one was held responsible ...

Osama bin Laden, a CIA asset dying of renal failure, was blamed. For the next ten years Osama was the bogeyman who provided the excuse for Washington to kill countless numbers of Moslems.

Then, suddenly on May 2, 2011, Obama claimed that US Navy Seals had killed bin Laden in Pakistan. Eyewitnesses on the scene contradicted the White House's story. Osama bin Laden became the only human in history to survive renal failure for ten years. There was no dialysis machine in what was said to be his hideaway. The numerous obituaries of bin Laden's death in December 2001 went down the memory hole. And the Seal team died a few weeks later in a mysterious helicopter crash in Afghanistan. The thousands of sailors on the aircraft carrier from which bin Laden was said to have been dumped into the Indian Ocean wrote home that no such burial took place ...

When it became clear that the White House had blocked an independent investigation of the only three steel skyscrapers in world history to collapse as a result of low temperature office fires, it was apparent that there was a cover-up.

After 13 years, people at home and abroad find the government's story less believable. The case made by independent experts is now so compelling that mainstream media has opened to it. Here is Richard Gage of Architects & Engineers ➡ for 9/11 Truth on C-SPAN: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3Zbv2SvBEec#t=23>

New York group making progress

After years of persistence, a group in New York has secured the necessary number of valid signatures to put on the ballot a vote to investigate the cause of the collapse of the three WTC buildings. The official account, if correct, means that existing fire and building codes are insufficient to protect the public and that all other steel highrise structures are subject to the same failure. The group has been clever to frame the issue in terms of public safety and not in terms of 9/11 truth.

New York authorities, of course, continue to oppose the initiative. The question now rests on a judge's ruling. It is difficult to imagine a judge going against the government in such a major way, but the group will have made the point that the government has no confidence in the truth of its own story.

Over these 13 years, physicists, chemists, architects, engineers, and first responders have provided massive evidence that completely disproves the official account of the failure of the three skyscrapers. The response to experts has been for non-experts to call experts "conspiracy theorists". In other words, the defenders of the government's story have no scientific or factual basis on which to stand. So they substitute name-calling.

9/11 was used to alter the nature of the US government and its relationship to the American people in a fundamental way. Unaccountable executive power has replaced due process, and the checks and balances established by the US Constitution. In the name of National Security, executive power knows no restraints. Essentially, Americans today have no rights if the government targets them ...

AN INCONVENIENT CHALLENGE

THE supposed 'consensus' on man-made global warming is facing an inconvenient challenge after the release of new temperature data showing the planet has not warmed for the past 15 years.

The figures suggest that we could even be heading for a mini-ice age to rival the 70-year temperature drop that saw 'frost fairs' held on the Thames River in 17th Century England.

Based on readings from more than 30,000 measuring stations, the data was issued in 2012 without fanfare by the Met Office and the University of East Anglia Climatic Research Unit. It confirmed that the rising trend in world temperatures ended in 1997.

Meanwhile, leading climate scientists told The Mail on Sunday that, after emitting unusually high levels of energy throughout the 20th Century, the sun is now heading towards a 'grand minimum' in its output, threatening cold summers, bitter winters and a shortening of the season available for growing food.

Solar output goes through 11-year cycles, with high numbers of sunspots seen at their peak. We are now at what should be the peak of what scientists call 'Cycle 24' – which is why the 2012 solar storm resulted in sightings of the aurora borealis further south than usual. But sunspot numbers are running at less than half those seen during cycle peaks in the 20th Century.

Analysis by experts at NASA and the University of Arizona – derived from magnetic-field measurements 120,000 miles beneath the sun's surface – suggest that Cycle 25, whose peak is due in 2022, will be a great deal weaker still. It is also possible that the new solar energy slump could be as deep as the 'Maunder minimum' (named after astronomer Edward Maunder), between 1645 and 1715 in the coldest part of the 'Little Ice Age' when, as well as the Thames frost fairs, the canals of Holland froze solid.

Sun and Sea temperatures

"World temperatures may end up a lot cooler for 50 years or more," said Henrik Svensmark, director of the Centre for Sun-Climate Research at Denmark's National Space Institute. "It will take a long battle to convince some climate scientists that the sun is important. It may well be that the sun is going to demonstrate this on its own, without the need of their help."

Professor Judith Curry of the Georgia Institute of Technology, said "It is becoming evident that factors other than CO2 play an important role in rising or falling temperature, such as the 60-year water temperature cycles in the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans. They have been insufficiently appreciated in terms of global climate." When both oceans were cold in the past, such as from 1940 to 1970, the climate cooled. The Pacific cycle 'flipped' back from warm to cold mode in 2008, and the Atlantic is also thought likely to flip in the next few years.

Pal Brekke, senior adviser at the Norwegian Space Centre, said some scientists found the importance of water cycles hard to accept, because doing so would mean admitting that the oceans – not CO2 – caused much of the global warming between 1970 and 1997. The same goes for the impact of the sun – which was highly active for much of the 20th Century. "Nature is about to carry out a very interesting experiment," he said. "Ten or fifteen years from now, we will be able to determine much better whether the warming of the late 20th Century really was caused by man-made CO2, or by natural variability."

Global Cooling

FORMER national space policy advisor to the White House and Congress as well as President of the Space and Science Research Corporation (SSRC), John L. Casey, discussed his discovery of a solar cycle that is steering the planet into a dangerous phase of global cooling. "There is no global warming. There has not been for many years," he declared, "and now we know, with fair certainty, that the Earth has been cooling for quite some time." Casey based this assessment on his study of solar cycles, which he called the "primary drivers of climate change" for Earth. As such, he posited that the theory of manmade climate change is a political agenda which has failed to be proven scientifically, despite decades of research, while his solar cycle concept has been shown to be reliable in predicting future climate patterns. According to Casey's research, Earth is currently in the process of experiencing a phenomenon known as 'solar hibernation,' where the amount of warming energy emitted from the sun is dramatically reduced. The nadir of this cooling should occur sometime in the early 2030's, he said, warning that "there's no one on the planet who has been through the kind of cold we're about to see." As Earth approaches that low point of the solar hibernation, Casey predicted, winters will grow longer as well as harsher which will cause farming to suffer as both the planting and harvesting of crops will be hindered by frigid temperatures. Famine, global unrest, and intense warfare are developments which Casey suggested are likely to arise as the global temperature falls.

THE CHRISTMAS TRUCE – 100 YEARS AGO

AS commemorations of World War I (July 1914–November 1918) have been held recently in Britain and other European countries, the Christmas Truce of 1914 has also been remembered by many. The cause of this spontaneous outburst in December 1914 would have arisen on various levels: First, the horrors and lack of hygiene in those wretched trenches, with dead and wounded comrades lying among the living soldiers, thus the need to bury the dead; the mutual sympathy for suffering of fellow European soldiers; the natural curiosity of many troops as to whether the War was necessary at all; and the deep longing for family and normality. (British poet Rupert Brooke, later killed in the War, expressed the longing for “... the cool kindliness of sheets, the rough kiss of the blanket ...”) In a recent issue of Impact, some aspects of the Christmas Truce were published, but the following is a more detailed report ...

ON Christmas Eve 1914, a spontaneous cease-fire was observed across the whole of the Western Front. The Christmas Truce of the First World War – a singular event unprecedented in the history of warfare – initially received widespread media coverage in the New York Times of 31 December 1914, followed by British newspapers such as The Daily Mirror, The Illustrated London News, and The Times, which printed front-page photographs of British and German troops mingling and singing Christmas carols.

The French government was the first to censor any reports on what they called “fraternisation with the enemy”. Political pressure was brought to bear to censor all reports of the event from mainstream history books for decades. For years the extraordinary event was known only by word of mouth from participants. The damage caused by the Christmas Truce to propaganda campaigns to demonise the enemy was regarded as a serious threat to the war.

It has taken decades to unearth the details of the fascinating events surrounding Christmas 1914.

and even visiting one another's trenches!

Compassion for the Foe

After heavy rains near Ypres, where the Germans held the high ground and the British the lower ground, English troops came out of their flooded trenches in full view of the Germans, who expressed their sympathy and did not open fire on their soaked and vulnerable enemy.

The 2nd Essex Regiment recorded in their War Diary of 11 December that their officers and men met the German Saxon Korp half-way between the trenches and exchanged food, cigarettes, chocolates and conversations.

The Christmas Truce began in the region of Ypres in Belgium, when, on Christmas Eve German soldiers began singing Christmas carols in their trenches. When British soldiers joined in singing ‘Silent Night’, then responded with carols of their own, the two sides began shouting Christmas greetings to each other. Shortly after that soldiers spontaneously came out of their trenches, walked across no-mans-land to greet one another, exchanged gifts and souvenirs.

This truce spread rapidly across the entire Western Front with over 100,000 German and British troops involved in this unofficial cessation of fighting. Soon Australian, New Zealand, Canadian, Belgian and French troops joined in the Christmas celebrations in the frozen strip of no-mans-land. Joint worship services were held. Respectful burial services were conducted by the combatants for the dead between their lines. Soldiers swapped ration packs, wine, pies, chocolates and souvenirs, such as buttons, badges and hats.

The next day football matches were played between the lines. British officer Robert Greys wrote of the football match between the 133 Saxon Regiment and his Scottish troops. The Glasgow News on 2 January reported on another match, as did Royal Field Artillery Lt, Albert Wynn, of their soccer match against the Hannoverians, near Ypres on Christmas Day.

Devastating KIA toll

In the first five months of the Great War, over a million Europeans had already been killed in action, mostly by artillery fire. The initially fast-moving campaigns had degenerated into static trench warfare with a continuous frontline of barbed wire and trenches running from the North Sea to the Swiss frontier.

From the first week of December, informal truces were observed by soldiers on the frontline. In a letter dated 7 December 1914, Charles De Gaulle expressed his dismay at fraternisation with the enemy, where French and German troops had exchanged newspapers, recovered their dead and organised burial groups in no-mans-land. French General d'Urbal expressed alarm over soldiers staying too long in the same sector becoming friendly with their enemies, to the extent that they were conducting conversations between the lines fire on the fraternising troops in no-mans-land. On none of these occasions did the artillery obey orders. There are numerous complaints on record by officers shocked at the total breakdown of discipline as men point-blank refused orders to open fire on their own soldiers, mingling with the enemy in no-mans-land.

Richard Schirrmann was so impressed by the comradeship experienced between his German regiment and French soldiers during the Christmas Truce – even exchanging addresses with one another – that he went on to found the Youth Hostel Association in 1919.

The Eastern Front

There were also sporadic observances of a Christmas Truce on the Eastern Front, where German, Austrian, Hungarian and Russian commanders observed cease-fires for the duration of Christmas.

Numerous French and British officers were court-martialled for participating in this 'fraternisation with the enemy'. Whole units had to be pulled back from the Front and sent to other fronts, when they displayed reluctance to fire on 'enemy' whom they had celebrated Christmas with. Numerous artillery units began to fire only at precise locations, at pre-arranged times, to avoid causing casualties. Many instances of soldiers firing high or ineffectually were reported.

OH, WHAT A LOVELY WAR!

A letter writer in The Week (England, 9 August 2014) refers to the diary entry by Violet Bonham-Carter, who recorded Winston Churchill as saying in 1915:

Liverpool battalion, and conducted burial services together. In December 1915, there were explicit orders directed by Allied commanders, and elaborate procedures made, to forestall any repeat of the previous Christmas Truce. But even the multiple artillery barrages ordered along the entire frontline, throughout Christmas Day by the British, were not completely effective and a number of truces were observed on the Western Front, Christmas 1915. On some sections of the Western Front, carols and gifts were exchanged between German and British troops and at least one football match, with about 50 soldiers on each side, was recorded in 1915.

Sir Ian Colquhoun of the Scots Guards was court-martialled for defying orders by maintaining a short truce to bury the dead between the lines, on Christmas Day 1915. Because he was related to British Prime Minister H.H. Asquith, his punishment was commuted.

German attempts in December 1916 and 1917 to observe Christmas truces were rebuffed by British Artillery barrages.

Vimy Ridge 1916

Recently evidence has come to light of a successful Christmas Truce in 1916, between German and Canadian soldiers near Vimy Ridge, where they exchanged Christmas greetings and presents. The Canadians and Germans visited one another's lines on 25 December 1916.

Memorials, Museum, feature film

A Christmas Truce Memorial was unveiled in Frelinghien, in France on 11 November 2008, on the spot where on Christmas Day 1914, the Royal Welsh Fusiliers played football with the German 371 Battalion.

The Christmas Truce is now openly acknowledged at the Imperial War Museum in London, with photographs of German and British troops celebrating Christmas together.

The 2005 French film, Joyeux Noël, dramatizes the Christmas Truce of 1914 through the eyes of French, Scottish and German soldiers on the Western Front.

Remembrance

THE following statement was made by RICHARD EDMONDS on Remembrance Day, November 2014, following the National Front parade at the Cenotaph, Whitehall, Central London . . .

Friends, Fellow Nationalists,

TODAY we pay tribute to those brave men and women who suffered and gave their lives in two World Wars. We do not forget the bravery and sacrifice of those men and women:

Those men who charged enemy machine-gun posts; who stormed up the Normandy beaches; who flew their planes into dangerous skies; those men of the Royal Navy and the Merchant Navy who sailed their ships across dark and dangerous oceans.

We do not forget the bravery of those men who faced death on a thousand battle-fields and whose names are engraved on war memorials from one end of the country to the other. Those men who marched away from every town, city and village, never to return.

Today may we, their sons and daughters, their grandsons and granddaughters, draw strength from their patriotism, their idealism and sacrifice.

We know that those dead heroes would turn in their graves if they could see what has become of Britain.

Let us say it: Those men were betrayed. The party politicians, the traitor-politicians have destroyed the country. Our proud cities, London, Birmingham, Manchester, Bradford, Leeds, parts of South Wales, parts of Scotland – turned into riot and permanent crime zones, where we the British are now in danger of becoming the minority in our own country.

This is the modern fight: the fight against the betrayal of Britain committed by the party politicians. This is the fight that the National Front has fought for fifty years. We fight for the white man, for his family and for Britain.

May the courage of those brave men whom we honour today inspire us now, as we face the inner-enemy, the politician-traitors of the old gang at Westminster.

REVISITING THE GREAT WAR

IN an article in an American paper, some misconceptions about the start of WWI are cleared up

WORLD War One very much appears as the suicide of Europe and the White race. The demographic consequences of the deaths of millions of young men before generating any children have been fatal. This was true in all the countries but most particularly in England and France. Both nations are shadows of their former selves, drained of their best blood.

The Great War also began the liquidation of the European colonial empires. The Third World could see that European civilization was destroying itself. Their hour of liberation was approaching. The eruption of Communism in Russia and elsewhere unleashed an evil that led directly to the Second World War. It also severely indicted the ethnic minority that unleashed it . . . SA does not have an energy crisis, as Eskom pleads it does. The mining industry controls this country and the coal industry is leading the pack. South Africa does not have an energy crisis. The energy crisis was created for the sake of the coal industry.

Every dam and water channel in this country came supplied with hydro-electric generators, most of which Eskom has always refused to connect to the national power grid. Those generators have rotted away and today nuclear power is the next big money-making scheme for the ANC. A small item tucked at the end of the ‘Spoiler Alert!’ column (on page 21 of the TVPlus programmes of 12-25 Nov) contained an ominous prediction of things to come.

Announcing that four of the most popular actors on ‘soapie’ 7de Laan (three of them white) were to leave the Laan, the ‘winds of change’ item read:

“All these behind-the-scenes ructions come amid changes ordered by SABC bosses. In September they told the producers to revamp the soap by diversifying their team, by adding a cultural adviser, [and] expanding their writing team to be more racially representative ...”

This means that Laan and other programmes shown on SABC channels are no longer independent, but are to be dictated to regarding the racial-mix of the characters they portray, and to have a cultural commissar ‘advising’ them on how to shape their stories. The Laan and Isidingo are possibly the most popular series on TV, and viewers have noted the increasing proportion of non-white participation, to the point now where roles for jealous females, psychotic husbands, evil business tycoons and other baddies are reserved for whites, and all the lovable characters go to non-whites. Even beautiful ‘Charlie’ in Isidingo (daughter of the white policeman) now has to kiss her ‘roomie’ Calvin, an unconvincing Coloured journalist of short stature with thick lips and bulging biceps.

What role does the SABC actually play in the production, direction and financing of the programmes? What say do the sponsors have about the SABC’s interference? Who are these nameless SABC bosses?

Is it those same SABC bosses who dictate to the News producers about the content of news bulletins? Every bulletin is now a dreary litany of crime, motor accidents, and court cases against those charged with crimes. Can it be those same bosses who insist that Julius Malema and his EFF party get prime exposure – reported on by senior reporters – when they hold a congress or meeting, and all other Opposition parties do not?

That could also explain why any series or film featuring only white characters is pushed to late night viewing whenever possible, when most normal people are already asleep. The Second Revolution is well on its way. Maybe they should, you know, like, ja-well-no-fine, go and do their homework, to get beyond Grade 3. – P B (Port Elizabeth)

A comedian on Algoa Radio a couple of weeks ago was discussing a news item about some mineworkers in Chile who had been trapped underground by a rockfall for a while.

YOUR Impact is sensational. I hadn’t heard of BIS (Bank of International Settlement), which is privately owned and behind the Western World Order. Who are these chimeras who run it? That’s the big question. Also, can you remind me why war sustains an economy – is it mainly to do with arms manufacturing and selling or other reasons?

Editor’s comment: Another Readers Letter arrived in time to answer, in part, the above enthusiastic reader.

I simply must tell you – or anyone else who might be interested – about two good feature films screened on SATV recently. Two gold nuggets found in the muddled SATV dross.

Both of the films are deeply thought-provoking and should be watched a 2nd time, if one can buy DVDs.

The first film, post-1990, is called Eschelon Conspiracy, revolving around the world-wide surveillance matrix noticed by an American computer nerd. Working in Thailand first, he receives a package containing a strange cell-phone which gives him anonymous messages. He is helped by a non-Thai taxi-driver, and over the next few episodes, as he ‘obeys’ the phone messages, he is unbelievably lucky. It is to do with mathematical calculations to produce the ‘most likely’ successful outcome. The scenes move to the Czech Republic, then Russia. The final scene is a big surprise.

The second film is called The International, and has to do with the financing of African wars by a secret banking combine. At one stage, an ex-KGB-man-cum-capitalist, admits that they don’t do it to control the conflict, but ‘to control the debt!’. – T W (Pretoria) □

South Africa has no shortage of beauties. Three have won international competitions: Penny Coelen (Miss World 1958); Anneline Kriel (Miss Universe 1974); and Rolene Strauss (Miss World 2014).

Answering reporters questions on her return to South Africa, Rolene Strauss said, smilingly: "No, I am not 'the product of genetic manipulation'. But I have to thank my parents for my genes."

FUNNY PEOPLE

VIEWERS WARNED TO BEWARE OF 'RACISM' IN TOM & JERRY

FOR generations, their slapstick escapades have delighted children around the world.

Now, however, Tom and Jerry cartoons are accompanied by a warning that they may depict scenes of 'ethnic and racial prejudice'.

The alert is on the cover of some DVD collections of the classic Warner Bros animation, first made more than 70 years ago. It says: "Tom and Jerry shorts may depict some ethnic and racial prejudices that were once commonplace in American society."

A similar disclaimer is given to online subscribers using Amazon's Prime Instant Video Service.

The cat and mouse cartoon's depiction of a maid known as Mammy-Two-Shoes has been criticised for her stereotypically black accent. And in an episode from 1951, Tom blackens Jerry's face with cigar smoke and then makes him do a minstrel dance.

This London Daily Mail report is reminiscent of how anti-white liberal thinking caused the famous French-language comic Tintin to be accused of 'racism'.

JAN VAN RIEBEECK IN CAPE TOWN? – NOT SO FUNNY

IN a speech in Cape Town on Friday evening (9.1.2015), President Jacob Zuma made the following statement:

"Jan van Riebeeck's arrival in Cape Town [1651] was the beginning of all South Africa's problems."

Jan van Riebeeck did not arrive in Cape Town. There was no Cape Town, there was no road, harbour, Castle of Good Hope, Parliament building, airport, Nkandla or KFC in sight. There was no infrastructure, there was no democracy or election. In fact, there wasn't even a black man in sight. The southern tip of Africa looked pretty much as it did on the day of creation, because the few scattered groups of itinerant Khoisan people lived off the land.

Black majority government in this country is a shameful failure and Zuma's 'forgiveness' means nothing to us. Keep it. We have no use for it, we are not interested in it. The age of ethnic nationalism has dawned in the rest of the world and it will reach South Africa also.
